"ways to help your kids get more out of the sermon" from notconsumed.com

Expect big things and hold them accountable

"Once you have a hold on your attitude, it's time to work on theirs. Start by expecting big things. Don't belittle their ability to grasp what is being discussed. Expect them to get a lot out of the sermon. You'll be shocked at how effective high expectations are and how damaging low expectations can be. If you give your child a coloring book and say, "This will keep you busy/quiet during the sermon," you may be sending a clear message that he/she is incapable of understanding and thus not going to be held accountable. You are likely also sending the message that church is boring and kids should be entertained. This starts at church. Expect them to enjoy the sermon for what it is. Kids are naturally curious and the BEST way to teach them is by allowing them to hear excellent things. In all things, we should be expecting a little bit more than we believe they are ready to handle. This is what grows them spiritually, academically, and even emotionally! Plus, remember that you will be right there to help them. "
